Auditor-General's Opinion

'Fear of God' of Publicity Held by Federal Servants

OTTAWA (UPI) — Federal civil servants have a "fear of God" of publicity.

This observation was made today by Auditor-General Watson Sellar to the opening meeting of the often-controversial public accounts committee. The committee was studying his 1958 report.

Asked repeatedly by committee members how they could most effectively fulfil their watch-dog function, Sellar stressed the power of publicity the committee holds. Publicity, he said flatly, was "the most effective weapon" anyone could have in dealing with the civil service.

"Every civil servant lives in fear in this regard," the auditor-general told the committee. "All you have to do is enter a department and say you're going to report something and it has an effect."

When Frank McGee (PC, York, Scarborough) protested that "fear" was too strong a word to describe the feelings of civil servants towards the committee, Sellar said the member of Parliament was underrating the committee's power.

"Civil servants just dread publicity, adverse or not," he said. "You have no power to disallow any payment made or action taken, but you can accomplish your end by putting the fear of God into civil servants through publicity."
